At Montpelier, in the county of Washington and state of Vermont, this 25th day of March, 1893, personally appeared the above named Charles Dewey, president, and George W. Reed, secretary, and made oath that the foregoing statement by them subscribed is true to the best of their knowledge, information and belief. Before me.

H. M. CUTLER,
Notary Public.

Forty-three years ago the National Life Insurance Company of Montpelier, Vt. commenced business as a local company, doing business in a restricted field. As it grew, however, it grasmally enhanced its territory, until now it is known in nearly all parts of the country, and everywhere recognized as one of the best. The sains during the past year were particularly marked, both in the amount of new business written and in the nersee in financial strength. The new business written was nearly a million more than during the previous year and from the earnings some $640.364 were added to the net ledger assets. This item, December 31, reached the substantial sum of $8.762.955. The surplus, on the same date, being (Actuaries' four per cent) $1,521,054.84, an increase of $162,368.21.

The cause of these handsome gains is to be found in the fact that the company writes a very popular policy and treats its policy hoiders fairly and well.

M. E. GOODBICH, General Agent Maryland and District of Columbia, it No. 32 South Holliday st. Baltimore, Md.

Throughout the different localities where the company has established agencies the same gratifying results are reported. In competition with larger and more widely known companies we have written more than our proportionate share of the business secured in the District of Columbia, and we take this occasion to thank our friends for their most liberal patronage and to call the attention of the general pulic to the results.
